Motion for a resolution
Recital A a (new)

Motion for a resolution	Amendment
	Aa. whereas gender-balanced representation and diversity in Parliament's bodies contribute to breaking down stereotypes, reduce discrimination and increase the level of democratic representation of EU citizens and the legitimacy of Parliament's decisions;

Or. en

Amendment 25
Margarita de la Pisa Carrión

Motion for a resolution
Recital A a (new)

Motion for a resolution	Amendment
	Aa. whereas protecting motherhood and facilitating reconciliation between work and family life should be concrete priorities for Parliament, with particular attention to pregnancy, childbirth, the needs of young children and care for dependent relatives;

Amendment 30
Irmhild Boßdorf

Motion for a resolution
Recital B

Motion for a resolution	Amendment
B. whereas gender inequalities intersect with other grounds of discrimination, including age, disability, racial or ethnic origin, socioeconomic status, migration background, sexual orientation and gender identity;	B. whereas gender discrimination is prohibited by law and the protection of the individual dignity of all citizens must be guaranteed, regardless of group identities[1a];
	[1a] Removal of the ideologically charged concept of 'intersectionality' and of terms such as 'gender identity'. Enshrining queer and gender research theories divides society into identity groups and undermines the constitutional principle of equality of individuals before the law.

Recital D

Motion for a resolution	Amendment
D. whereas women account for 60.2 % of Parliament staff but only 35.3 % of Directors-General;	D. whereas appointments to all levels of the hierarchy of Parliament's administration, in particular to management positions such as Directors-General, must be made strictly on the basis of suitability, competence and professional performance[1a];
	[1a] Achieving a rigid 50/50 equal outcome at top management level (Directors-General) is rejected as interference with the principle of merit. Promotions in the public sector must be based on qualifications, service experience and individual performance, not on the statistical distribution of the total workforce. State-imposed quotas place qualified candidates at a disadvantage and undermine administrative efficiency.

Paragraph 27 a (new)

Motion for a resolution	Amendment
	27a. Calls for a systematic, methodologically rigorous and evidence-based evaluation of the implementation and effectiveness of gender mainstreaming measures within the European Parliament, building on existing assessments and available evidence; stresses that such an evaluation should examine the extent to which the measures have achieved their intended objectives, identify the underlying causes of any implementation gaps, distinguish between shortcomings in implementation and limitations in the design of the measures themselves, and identify effective practices that could inform future action; emphasises that any additional institutional obligations should be informed by the findings of the evaluation and accompanied by clearly defined objectives, proportionate implementation arrangements and appropriate, measurable indicators of effectiveness;

Paragraph 28 a (new)

Motion for a resolution	Amendment
	28a. Recognises the important contribution of the European Institute for Gender Equality (EIGE) to promoting equality between women and men through research, data collection and the provision of expertise to the EU institutions and Member States; encourages continued cooperation with EIGE to improve the availability and comparability of reliable data, share good practices and support evidence-based policy-making; stresses that advancing gender equality is a shared responsibility that benefits from the active engagement of women and men alike; calls for efforts to encourage greater male participation among EIGE's staff, alongside the continued promotion of equal opportunities for all, with a view to fostering a more gender-balanced workforce that brings diverse perspectives, skills and professional experiences to the Institute's work; underlines that inclusive working environments and broad participation can strengthen institutional effectiveness, improve understanding of equality-related challenges and contribute to a more competitive, innovative and cohesive European Union;
