

Question for written answer E-002359/2024/rev.1
to the Commission
Rule 144
Nikolaos Anadiotis (NI)

Subject: Suspension of the Schengen Treaty

By de facto abolishing – or at least limiting – the Schengen Treaty, a string of countries, namely Germany, Denmark, Hungary, France, and others, have started introducing a series of border checks to deal with the emergency situation created in a number of Member States by Islamist terrorist attacks¹. It should be noted that the attacks in question are the result of uncontrolled migration and the inability to control migration flows, within the European Union, from Third World countries, and they put the safety of European citizens at risk.

In light of the above, would the Commission consider it advisable to tolerate or even to propose a suspension of the Schengen Treaty for as long as is deemed necessary and for the national authorities to reintroduce border checks within European countries in order to address the emergency situation that has developed in Europe as a result of Islamist attacks?
