

Question for written answer E-002936/2024
to the Commission

Rule 144

Lídia Pereira (PPE), Sebastião Bugalho (PPE), Paulo Cunha (PPE), Hélder Sousa Silva (PPE)

Subject: Need to follow up on proposals from reports published in 2024

The EU finds itself in the early days of a new political and institutional cycle that has taken shape over the course of 2024. Also this year, important reports have been published on the multiple and complex challenges facing the EU with regard to the competitiveness of its economy (Draghi report¹), the protection and consolidation of its internal market (Letta report²), the protection and modernisation of the farming sector (report on the strategic dialogue on the future of EU agriculture³) and the building of a proper capital markets union (Noyer report⁴).

Parliament took note of those reports and, on a number of occasions and in different formats, discussed their main findings and most meaningful proposals. Ordinary people, however, are obviously more concerned about what real-world decisions those reports may lead to.

1. How and according to what time frame will the Commission follow up on the findings of those reports?
2. What legislative initiatives does it consider a priority, whether proposals for new legislation or to alter existing legislation, as part of its follow-up to the reports' findings?
3. How will it balance initiatives of that kind with the goal of simplifying matters and cutting red tape?
