

Question for written answer E-003638/2025
to the Commission

Rule 144

Alessandra Moretti (S&D), Lina Gálvez (S&D)

Subject: Online platforms' responsibilities in the protection of human dignity and women's rights

Recent scandals emerging in Italy involving websites and platforms where images of women – both private and public – were shared along with hundreds of sexist and violent comments have brought back the debate about the responsibilities of platform and social network operators regarding content disseminated on their services.

Furthermore, new digital technologies and artificial intelligence are being used as tools to make it difficult to identify the perpetrators of pornographic crimes, including cases where the victims are minors.

Considering the seriousness of this phenomenon, which promotes a culture where women are treated as property and leads to violence against them, causing great harm to victims, does the Commission consider it appropriate to:

1. ensure the correct application of existing measures to hold platform and social network operators accountable for content published by users, particularly on erotic and pornographic platforms, including establishing operator responsibilities equivalent to those of publishers?
2. improve EU coordination for traceability with the aim of identifying individuals committing such crimes?
3. order the immediate removal of the content involved, in coordination with national authorities?
