Subject: Current regulation proposal for Erasmus+

The strength of the Erasmus+ programme lies in the robust networks and partnerships it has established, which contribute to promoting a true European area of education and a union of skills. This was reinforced in the current regulation of the programme¹, which spelled out that ‘where appropriate, specific arrangements regarding direct management should be put in place for actions involving Union-wide networks and European organisations under key actions 2 and 3, excluding small-scale partnerships’.

1. Which section of the current regulation proposal for Erasmus+ envisages the same financial support for these networks and how would the existing grants for networks be protected under the upcoming programme?
2. The proposed merger of Erasmus+ with the European Solidarity Corps lacks clarity on implementation. With limited references to solidarity and volunteering in the new regulation, how will the Commission maintain and safeguard the specific nature of volunteering?
