Subject: Granting sensitive cadastral data of European citizens to banks, funds and servicers

Reliable journalistic sources and complaints to the European Public Prosecutor's Office¹ reveal the transfer of personal data of millions of European (mainly Greek) citizens to banks, funds and servicers, in violation of European legislation on personal data, unfair competition and sound management of European funds.

As alleged, the State-controlled company 'Hellenic Cadastre' gave access to citizens' property and cadastral data to a real estate company (Prosperity), which then collaborated with a servicer (Do Value) and was partially acquired by a banking institution (Eurobank). At the same time, the real estate company Prosperity has entered a contract with the Greek Government, which has assigned it the collection of data for real estate auctions.²

Given that the matters above (a) constitute a violation of European law on the protection of personal data, unfair competition and sound management of European funds, (b) undermine citizens' trust in the company 'Hellenic Cadastre', whose projects are co-financed by the EU, and (c) reinforce unfair practices of servicers against borrowers, the Commission is asked:

1. Was the implementation of the contract between the company 'Hellenic Cadastre' and the real estate company in question financed with European funds?
2. If so, does the Commission consider that this funding is in line with European rules, and If not, what measures does it intend to take?
3. What measures does the Commission intend to take to investigate the possible leakage of the cadastral data of millions of citizens, in violation of EU law?
