Rule 144

Subject: Water scarcity emergency in Attica and in Greece as a whole

A water scarcity emergency has emerged in Attica and in Greece as a whole, with water reserves dropping significantly and water adequacy increasingly at risk. This situation has a direct impact on the daily lives of citizens, public services and critical sectors of the economy, while the risk of further deterioration calls for immediate coordination and support.

Given that, in the context of European solidarity, there are mechanisms in place – such as the European Solidarity Fund, the EU Civil Protection Mechanism and the Recovery and Resilience Facility (RRF) – that can support Member States in emergency situations and that enable the provision of technical, operational and financial assistance, can the Commission say:

1. What specific actions can the Commission take to provide immediate support to help ensure sufficient water supply in highly populated urban areas such as Attica?
2. Can the Commission provide guidance on the swift mobilisation of the relevant European mechanisms in water scarcity emergencies such as this?
