

Question for written answer E-001319/2026
to the Commission
Rule 144

Subject: Safety, dignity and protection of personal data of victims of online gender-based violence

The non-consensual sharing of intimate or manipulated material, including content generated or modified using artificial intelligence, constitutes a serious violation of privacy and human dignity that affects women and young people in particular. Recent incidents and pending court cases in Member States, including Greece, highlight risks of repeated victim exposure. Despite Directive (EU) 2024/1385, Regulation (EU) 2022/2065 and the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR), there are still shortcomings in the protection of victims and in ensuring their dignity in the legal process. The need for systematic European intervention remains urgent.

In view of the above, can the Commission answer the following:

1. What additional actions does it consider necessary to enhance the safety, dignity and protection of personal data of victims of online gender-based violence?
2. How does the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) ensure respect for the principle of proportionality and prevent secondary victimisation during the processing of sensitive data in its use as evidence?
3. What monitoring mechanisms and procedures are in place to ensure the uniform and effective implementation of Directive (EU) 2024/1385 in the Member States, with a view to effectively protecting the dignity and safety of victims?
