to the Commission
Rule 144

Subject: Measures needed to strengthen Europe's migrant integration policy, based on greater mutual respect and reconciliation

The EU is founded on values such as democracy, the rule of law, gender equality, freedom of expression, respect for human rights and tolerance.

Article 2 of the Treaty on European Union (TEU) enshrines respect for human dignity, freedom, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights. At the same time, Article 79 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU) provides for the development of a common immigration policy, including the integration of non-EU nationals.

However, the cultural differences between immigrants and the peoples of the Union make it necessary to strengthen the scope of European policy concerning their integration, going beyond the predominantly administrative and socio-economic approach and explicitly including ownership of the EU's fundamental values, the principles of the rule of law, gender equality, freedom of conscience and expression, and the democratic and secular nature of public institutions, where these are enshrined in the national constitutional order.

Given that the Commission is responsible for coordinating European integration strategies, I would like to ask it to clarify whether it intends to optimise these European policies, which are based on mutual respect and ownership of our values, so that cultural diversity is protected and European citizens are not directly or indirectly forced to live in a way that is contrary to the values, freedoms and democratic traditions of the societies in which they were born and live.
