Question for written answer E-003473/2019
to the Commission
Rule 138
Maria Grapini (S&D)

Subject: Labelling of organic products

Organic foods and chemical products, which have recently been gaining an increasing market foothold in Europe, are considerably more expensive than their non-organic counterparts.

What criteria and standards must products meet to be classified as organic and labelled as such by producers and, in the Commission's view, how is it possible to verify whether products labelled as organic in fact correspond to this designation?