Answer given by Mr Šefčovič
on behalf of the European Commission
(28.1.2026)

The Commission decision of 25 September 2025 not to impose provisional anti-dumping duties in the ongoing anti-dumping investigation on imports of certain continuous filament glass fibre reinforcements from Bahrain, Egypt and Thailand (Case AD728¹) reflects the assessment of the evidence available at the provisional stage and does not prejudice the Commission's final determination.

The Commission continues to examine thoroughly all submissions received from interested parties, including EU producers, users and other stakeholders. The Commission is fully aware of the importance of EU glass fibre industry for key value chains and all relevant elements are being assessed in line with the basic anti-dumping regulation². The final determination and any definitive measures where appropriate, will be adopted by 15 April 2026 at the latest.

Regarding circumvention, the EU trade defence legislation provides a specific legal framework to address practices that undermine existing measures. Where circumvention is established, the Commission may extend the scope of duties to preserve their effectiveness.

The Commission monitors trade flows closely and may initiate an anti-circumvention investigation where sufficient evidence is available, either on its own initiative or following a request from an interested party or a Member State.
