Under the Regulation establishing the Recovery and Resilience Facility (RRF) light, medium and deep renovations were all eligible for support¹, and the decision of which specific measures to include in their national plans lied with the Member States. As noted by the European Court of Auditors (ECA) in its report², most RRF energy efficiency measures targeted at least a medium-depth renovation, while there are cases where Member States specifically targeted deep renovations. Due to their characteristics, deep renovations were not always a feasible solution for the RRF measures, especially in its final phase of implementation due to the strict timeframe of the RRF.

The Commission has partially reflected the recommendations from ECA related to improving the targeting of renovation measures by introducing dedicated tracking and performance monitoring (including intervention fields and performance indicators) for deep, medium and light renovations in its proposal for the Performance Regulation 2028-2034 for the next Multiannual Financial Framework³.
