Answer given by Executive Vice-President Ribera
on behalf of the European Commission
(29.7.2025)

The Commission can confirm that it is fully committed to ensuring the effective implementation and enforcement of the Digital Markets Act (DMA). The Commission has clarified¹, and more recently in the debate in the European Parliament plenary on 9 July 2025 on transatlantic trade, that the EU's legislation and regulatory framework remain non-negotiable, and that the Commission will continue to protect the EU's regulatory autonomy.

The Commission is very much committed to implementing the DMA in a robust and evidence-based manner as swiftly as possible. The Commission has already adopted two non-compliance decisions², two specification decisions³ and issued various preliminary findings⁴. The Commission also continues to engage in constructive and all-inclusive regulatory dialogue with all designated gatekeepers and interested third parties to ensure that the DMA delivers on its objectives. Concrete changes on the market are already observable (for instance, the introduction of choice screens or the availability of alternative app stores on iPhones).

The Commission is determined to maintain open and transparent communication channels with the European Parliament, including through the Working Group on the Implementation of the DMA. The Commission values the Working Group's monitoring and feedback, which it believes is essential for shaping and supporting the work of the DMA team. In line with Article 35 of the DMA, the Commission also regularly reports to the European Parliament via its annual report on the implementation of the DMA⁵. The Commission ensures transparency throughout the DMA implementation process also by regularly updating the public on all key milestones via the Commission's dedicated DMA website⁶.
